These species represent only a few selected examples.

Legend
- Open waterway
- Piped waterway
- Lost waterway
- Lost pond (Squint Lake)
- Major watershed boundary
- Active Streamkeepers

Wildlife
- Beaver
- Coyote
- Crab
- Crow
- Black-tailed deer
- Mallard duck
- Red-tailed hawk
- Heron
- Muskrat
- Owl
- Raccoon
- Spotted frog
- Coho salmon
- White sturgeon
- Cutthroat trout
- Steelhead trout
- Rainbow trout
- Painted turtle

These species represent only a few selected examples.
As one of Burnaby’s largest waterways this creek was created as a drainage ditch by the early settlers in the area. The creek was named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was once a drainage ditch and was later named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was once a drainage ditch and was later named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was once a drainage ditch and was later named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was once a drainage ditch and was later named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was once a drainage ditch and was later named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was once a drainage ditch and was later named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.

This creek was once a drainage ditch and was later named after Mr. Cash who ran a general store in the area in the early 1900s.